WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

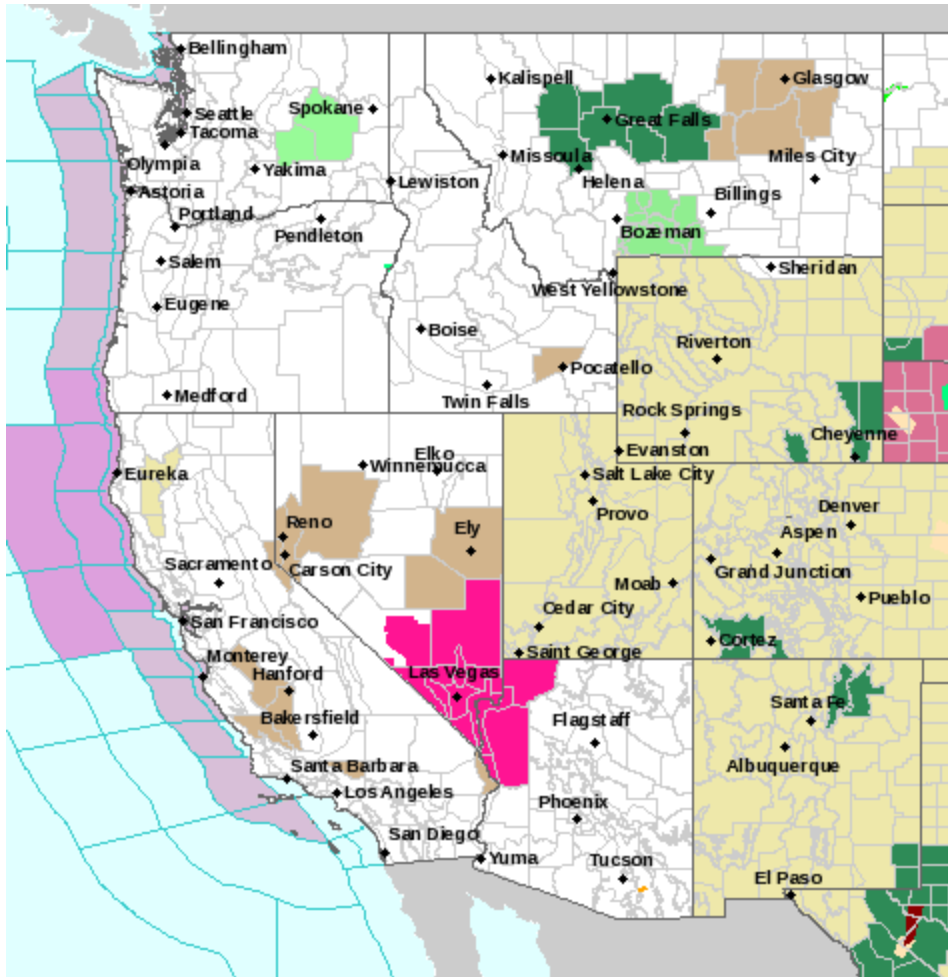

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

A cooling trend is expected this weekend, with well below normal temperatures on Sunday. Breezy winds are expected in the Valley late this afternoon and evening, gusting to around 30 mph. Showers and thunderstorms spread into the northern mountains by early this evening. Showers become more widespread across the mountains Sunday, possibly extending into the northern Sacramento Valley, with thunderstorms in the afternoon and evening.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

The marine layer will deepen to the coastal slopes as an upper trough moves over Southern California this weekend. Most areas should remain partly to mostly cloudy west of the mountains and some light rain in the foothills. Cooler temperatures across the area and gusty winds mainly over the Antelope Valley are the conditions expected through the weekend. Warming trend will return by mid week with some interior areas reaching the 90s to lower 100s.
